Reading each other's writing

Water use in data centres

Writer: _____ Reader: _____ Open Knowledge, 13 October

Read the whole thing once before you write anything.

1. What is this writer's claim? One sentence, in your own words — not a summary of the three texts.

2. Which of the three texts did they trust most, and on what grounds? Name the grounds: evidence, sources, hedging, tone.

3. Do you agree with their judgement of the sources? Point at a sentence.

4. Do you agree with their conclusion about water?

3 and 4 are different questions. A text can be well evidenced and still reach a conclusion you reject, and you can agree with a conclusion that rests on nothing. Say which is which.

Then talk to the writer. Start with question 1, and let them tell you whether that is what they meant.
